Hints on Rose Culture

Situation.

A place apart from trees and other plants should be assigned to roses, oblong beds about four feet wide are best, as flowers may be gathered and plants handled without treading on beds. A north-eastern aspect, or any position where plants would get morning sun is best. Roses like free circulation, and should not be closely surrounded by trees, as near trees the soil is likely to be crowded with roots, and closeness is apt to cause weakness and mildew.

Preparation of Ground.

If roses must be planted near trees, as is often the case in old gardens, have the ground well trenched — at least two feet deep — carefully remove all roots, keeping the subsoil below but thoroughly breaking it up, and mix well-rooted manure with it, then cover with good soil and tread down firm. Prepare ground some time before planting if possible.

Planting.

Roses can be safely planted from open ground at any time between about the middle of May to the end of August, or whenever frosty weather begins in Autumn, till it ends in Spring. During the season of frost, roses and most deciduous plants are dormant, and can be safely transplanted. From tins they can be planted at any time of the year.

Put the plants in same depth as they were, or a little deeper, spread the roots out well, fill up with good soil, tread firm, and water well at once, sufficiently to saturate the ground around the roots. Stake each plant to prevent shaking where exposed to wind.

Watering.

Thoroughly saturate the ground immediately the trees are planted; after that a good soaking once or twice a week should be enough.

Manuring.

Roses require plenty of manure when once well established and thriving; this should be simply forked into the soil around the plants. A thin layer of straw or light manure left as mulch on surface of rose beds is beneficial to the plants. Newly planted roses should not be manured.

Thinning and Suckering.

While the plants are growing, don't allow too many shoots on a branch or to a plant. Look out for suckers i.e., wild shoots which break out from the root underground. Cut them clean off at the root. Wild rose shoots are generally easily recognised by their lance-shaped leaves; if allowed to grow they impoverish the grafted rose, and may choke it off altogether.

Mildew and Greefly.

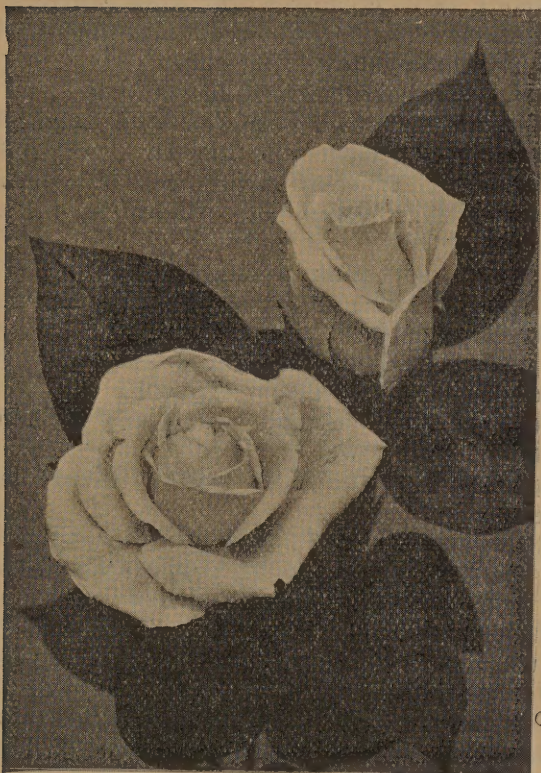

The best cure for mildew is flowers of sulphur, applied immediately it is noticed; if the foliage is dry, syringe the plants before dusting them with the sulphur, or apply in the morning when dew is on the leaves. Greenfly is said to be destroyed by quassia chips and soft soap. Boil 4 ozs. of quassia chips in a gallon of water for 10 minutes, strain and dissolve in it 4 ozs. of soft soap, to this add another gallon or two of water, and apply with a syringe in the evening, and syringe again with clean water in the morning.

Encourage ladybird insects on the rose plants, as they destroy greenfly quickly and effectually. Ladybirds are usually found in fields of green barley in the early Spring, and will as a rule find their way to rose plants when greenfly is about.

Any information or assistance that we can give will be gladly given, as we are anxious that all roses and trees sent out by us should give satisfaction, and a Post Card addressed "Nurseries, Modder River," will always find us.
